POOR "SHATDLONIM"

The antics of some of our Jewish brethren at times pass understanding.

Last week Toronto had the doubtful honour of a visit by the latest "super-attraction"—Queen Marie of Roumania and her entourage. But a short while ago we had Suzanne Lenglen. Next week we will have "Red" Grange. Queen Marie ranks with the other two as a headliner, though she does not enjoy the privilege of being managed by "Cash and Carry" Pyle.

That some people in this city were curious enough to turn out to see the newest "seventh wonder" was not surprising. It does not take much to amuse some persons, especially if the entertainment is free. Many people justified their interest on the ground that the Queen was the ruler of one of the allied countries, forgetting, of course, that Roumania's support was not motivated by sympathy with the cause for which the Allies were fighting, but rather by selfish reasons after a long period of vacillation between the two camps. Perhaps they hoped that the Queen would remind herself here of the forty million dollars, which her country had borrowed from Canada after the war and had never paid back. The public at large did not care to recall that Roumania was a semi-barbarous country—one which Great Britain had on at least two occasions had to reprimand for barbarities—and ordinarily unfit to associate with civilized Britishers. In any case, Toronto is a hospitable city and her courtesy need not cause any wonder.

It was, however, surprising—and indeed mortifying—to hear that some of our Jewish citizens had so little self-respect as to go cringing before the Queen, and offer their unwelcome homage.

The heading in the press read that "members of the Roumanian colony" appeared to welcome their Queen. If such was the case we should not be concerned. But the names and the accompanying photographs revealed what the initiated might have expected: the "Roumanian colony" were Jews. And they were Zionists at that!

Roumania has treated her Jewish population more atrociously than even Russia of the Czars. And at the very moment when the local Jewish citizens were smiling their hypocritical smiles at the Queen, Jews in Roumania were being subjected to the most inhuman cruelties.

A delegation of Ukrainians appeared before the Queen too. They were not Jews. Their brethren were being oppressed in Roumania. The Ukrainians did not fawn. They did not bear flowers. They did not prattle prayers. They spoke up like men. They reminded the Queen that Ukrainian men and women were being treated inhumanly in her land where she is Queen. They asked her to exercise whatever influence she may have to change the condition of the Ukrainians.

JEWISH CANDIDATES

F. M. ISSERMAN

Many citizens of Toronto have been nauseated by the rumours and reports about provincial candidates which have emanated from the ridings of St. Andrews and St. Patricks, and which have appeared in the public press. The two mentioned ridings have large Jewish constituencies, and whenever discussions about possible candidates occur, the issue is neither the men's character, nor their fitness for office, nor their platform, but rather their religious affiliations. One group maintains that a Christian should be nominated and another that a Jew should be the candidate. The injection of religious issues in the political arena is always to be deplored. It leads to bitterness and malice, to blind partisanship and bigoted balloting. It tends to obscure the public weal, as by its appeal to a narrow loyalty it befogs the needs of the state. To the public it should be a matter of supreme indifference whether an official, a guardian of its interests, be Jew, Protestant or Catholic. Its sole concern should be with the character and ability of its officials. There are men in all three groups who when put in positions of trust, would administer them with conscientiousness and efficiency, just as there are men in all three groups who would prove rascals in public office, intent only in serving their own interests. A man's religious affiliation should neither qualify nor disqualify him from holding public office. A man should not be elected because he is a Catholic, nor should be be defeated because he is a Catholic. Neither should a man be nominated by a convention, because he is a Jew, nor should be be refused a nomination because he is a Jew.

The claim has often been made that it is essential that Jews have their representatives in the legislature. With this claim we have no sympathy. There are few if any specific Jewish political interests. The one big exception which comes to our mind is that of immigration, in which Jews as Jews are vitally concerned. But in practically all other public matters, the Jews as Jews have no policies which would necessitate special spokesmen. Whenever specific Jewish problems come before legislative bodies, these bodies will always and do generally call in Jewish leaders who can qualify as spokesmen for the Jews and give the Jewish point-of-view. A Jew's election to a legislature does not at all mean that he will be equipped by sympathy and knowledge to speak with authority on Jewish matters. A man's political affiliations are generally determined by his economic interest. The manufacturer who needs protection becomes a conservative. The farmer, who needs no high duties, votes liberal. The working man who finds that neither of these parties protects his economic interests, votes the labour ticket.

Where Security Is Lasting

No part of Canada is more firmly established, industrially and agriculturally, or less subject to trade vicissitudes than the busy Ontario counties of Hastings, Northumberland and Peterboro.

In the centre of this district are located the plants of the Quinte and Trent Valley Power Company, Limited, supplying manufacturers of long standing with hydro-electric power.

We recommend the preferred stock of this Company as a sound and desirable investment.

Among those present at the luncheon in Montreal in honour of Queen Marie, of Roumania, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel Wednesday, October 27, were: Mr. and Mrs. Peter Bercovitch, Miss Sallie Solomon, Mr. and Mrs. L. Rubenstein, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Jacobs and Mr. and Mrs. Lyon W. Jacobs. Mr. and Mrs. Max B. Margosches, of Ottawa, went to the reception in honour of Queen Marie of Roumania, Thursday, October 28, at the House of Commons.

When Queen Marie of Roumania first came to these shores, the Jewish Morning Journal thought it timely to issue a word of warning to the Jews to express their dissatisfaction with conditions in Roumania with moderation, to voice their feelings in an orderly manner without disturbing the peace. Apparently it never occurred to the paper that there are Jews who should be admonished to refrain from paying homage and to voice their admiration of the Roumanian ruler without disturbing the peace—the peace of sensitive, self-respecting other Jews. The Morning Journal reckoned without such groups as the Federation of Roumanian Jews in America, the Roumanian Jewish Congregation, Shaarei Hashomayim, in Chicago and Adath Israel, the Roumanian Hebrew Congregation, in Toronto. The Federation sent representatives who couldn't resist welcoming the queen, the Chicago congregation invited her to services and the Toronto congregation said it with flowers.

The Jewish voice lifted up against Roumanian wrongs, instead of being without moderation, was more than discreet; it was feeble, hardly audible. Norman Thomas, former Socialist candidate for mayor of New York, asked publicly whether the Jews, failing to protest, had lost their self-respect. Above the soul-stirring discussions on unaccustomed mauve cravats, spats and high silk hats, little was heard to remind the Queen of any misery behind the scenes in Roumania.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of course, spoke out at a conference to consider matters affecting Jews in East European countries, including Roumania. He said that "both Gentiles and Jews should call the attention of the public to the grievous wrongs to which the Jews of Roumania, despite all assurances and treaty obligations, are still being subjected." Oscar Leonard, of St. Louis, who was Joint Distribution Committee director of Roumanian Relief in Bucharest, complained that, "Queen Marie has not raised her voice to protest against the miserable conduct of the Roumanian students who have kept their fellow students from the universities in Roumania in the past four years; nor against the miseries to which the Jews have been subjected during the four years of the Bratianu administration." The Federation of Hungarian Jews in America made a plea to the Queen for the Jews in Transylvania, the former Hungarian province incorporated into Roumanian territory, enumerating the injustices suffered by the Jews there and congratulating the Queen on being in a country "where the Jews are in a position to protest against the injustices perpetrated on their brethren in another country."

And while, in Toronto, the Ukrainians protested to the Queen about Roumania's treatment of their fellow-countrymen and while in Winnipeg, the Ukrainians have tried to stop an official reception for her, it remained for the Roumanian Hebrew Congregation of Toronto, members of a race terribly oppressed by Roumania, to be different and to show their gratitude to the symbol of the Roumanian government. Representatives of this congregation bowed the head and bent the knee and gave the Queen bouquets of yellow chrysanthemums as a token of their appreciation and as an inspiration to her to go back to Roumania and keep on using her influence on behalf of their people. In their ornate address these Jews blessed the King, the Queen, the kingdom and all its subjects and took great delight in the fact that the rulers "harbour feelings of friendship toward the Jews and acknowledge their equality." They were "confident that the Queen will exert her influence and shed the sweetness of her mind and spirit in all the corners of her kingdom to encourage feelings of humanity toward the children of Israel," etc., etc., etc.

Who asked them to form a delegation and go through the motions of a slavish act which, in the eyes of the community in general, seems to have the sanction of all the Jews here? There are other congregations really representative who have too much sense and too much dignity to bow and scrape before the representative of a country where anti-Semitism is the heart of the government policy. In Toronto and everywhere else most Jews burn with helpless anger and a sense of defeat over Roumania's bad treatment of their co-religionists. Such people would go to lengths to oppose and prevent, if possible, any Jewish group going even in pseudo-official capacity to present any Jewish compliments to the Queen of Roumania. They have every right to feel outraged and sold by one of the very minor Jewish groups here and by a rabbi unknown until, by a burst of rare luck, the Queen of Roumania came here and the Ladies' Auxiliary decided it was now or never.

No one is deceived as to why they brought homage to the Queen. It certainly wasn't in the childish belief that they could create good-will productive of any concrete good when the Queen gets home. The Roumanian Hebrew congregation paid its respects to the Queen simply because it was the chance of a lifetime to push into the presence of royalty for the price of some yellow flowers.

Jewish Press in Palestine

By GAALYA CORNFELD

"I am satisfied if half a dozen readers only would enjoy this article; I would then be justified in publishing it," said the editor of a popular newspaper in Palestine. I can see American readers and publishers smile. This remark, and the horror in which sensationalism is held, are perhaps symbolical of the kind of journalism that could serve the needs of a self-contred but growing community, jealously proud of its intellectual superiority, and above all of the personal freedom of thought enjoyed by the humblest of its members.

The Palestinian press grew vigorously during the last seven or eight years, in common with the rapid development of the country and the increase of the immigration. Those engaged in colonizing and industrializing the new homeland endeavoured as well to perfect an adequate political and spiritual instrument, as they regarded their press. Although comparatively impecunious in most cases, the new dailies and weeklies, reflecting the brimful intellectual vigor of the Jewish immigration from Eastern Europe, battled their way through in spite of serious economic obstacles. Some have already perished in the brave attempt, but the majority have survived, fully conscious of their power.

The press of Palestine is the only and, therefore, the most powerful instrument of public opinion in a country devoid, for certain reasons, of a national house of representatives. With all the sentimental appeal that this focal point of the Zionist movement, and the home of three great religions, has for the world, it is not be to wondered that publications with the simplest of organizations and with no exceptional intrinsic worth in themselves, should be quoted persistently in the international press, and should thereby be instrumental in fashioning world opinion and British public opinion, in a direction favorable to reforms desired by Palestinian Jews. The world gazes intently at the small and distant Palestinian stage as represented mainly by its press, through opera glasses, greatly to the prestige of this press.

When Lord Plumer, the new High Commissioner for Palestine, a Field Marshal, accustomed to military discipline and the harmonious mental attitude of the population of British

Malta, where he had been High Commissioner, first came in contact with the Palestinian boiling press, he scowled at the active virus. He availed himself of the very first opportunity to remark bluntly, but good-humoredly that he would not hesitate to exile turbulent journalists to the Island of Samoa, in the Pacific Ocean! The journalists nodded understandingly to one another. They were in no hurry to compare the new High Commissioner with Sir Herbert Samuel, his predecessor who had become, by his brilliant achievements, an immortal figure in Palestine. Otherwise journalism in Palestine is still going strong. Palestine's "benevolent autocrat" probably realizes, as Sir Herbert has in the past, the expediency of feeling the very sensitive pulse of Palestine, and the uselessness of muzzling a high-minded press.

There are two presses in Palestine, the Jewish and the Arabic; the former somewhat puritanic in tendency, but very interesting for reasons explained above; the latter very mediocre, but amusing, at least to an impartial mind.

The Jewish community, numbering about 150,000, does not buy more than 15,000 newspapers daily and certainly not more than 5,000 weeklies, though the actual number of readers is seven or eight times as large. There are at least four dailies in circulation and a dozen weeklies, in addition to intermittent periodicals. Who are their readers? There are in Palestine Oriental Jews from Bokhara, Persia and Iraq, very similar outwardly to Arabs; the native Palestinians of all degrees of culture; and there are university men and women from New York and Chicago. There are Jews from the Yemen, in Southern Arabia, fond of the ritual classics, and there are agricultural experts from the colleges of France or California, engineers from Germany, bankers from Holland and Poland, manufacturers and merchants from Russia and Poland. There are students and writers, doctors and lawyers, architects and musicians, organizers and a multitude of well-educated laborers from Eastern Europe and Western, from Asia and America. Among all these, some are conservative in temperament; some are eager above all for social progress; the majority are politically inclined and progressive in their views.

The newspapers appear usually in four to eight pages, somewhat bulkier in the Saturday editions (Saturday is the day of rest). One page only is devoted to foreign cables, a chain of brief items. They run down two or three columns. Local news of the day receives slightly more space. Another column or two gives brief summaries of the "last news." The remainder of the paper is filled with literary, political or scientific articles. This satisfies the needs of the highly intellectual community and whether cable news and feature articles are correlated sooner or later, or are not at all, such a money and labour-saving practice is at least justifiable under the prevailing conditions of the country. Journalism in Palestine is not an unmixed financial success. The Doar Hayom, with the largest circulation, charges two or three times the price for advertising that other Hebrew dailies charge and five to ten times as much as the Arabic dailies. Because this daily conservative in tendency, runs more to matter-of-fact views than literary columns, it was branded by its less fortunate contemporaries as a "yellow paper." The other dailies are weeklies are patronized almost exclusively— please do not miss the distinction—by "intellectuals," "laborers," radicals, "moderate Jews," "extreme orthodox" and so on, both publishers and the readers careful to maintain the distinction.

The Jewish press is published almost entirely in Hebrew, a language considered dead until revived and used only for ritual purposes. It has since been rapidly revived, adapted and expanded, to meet the needs of modern life, without departing from its Oriental spirit.

There is also a daily tabloid published in English, distributing more or less reliable telegraphic news to the Jewish and general press abroad and the Palestine Weekly, also published in English, representing

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE FOR PALESTINE

"Pussyfoot" Johnson, the American anti-liquor propagandist, has been carrying the message of prohibition to the Near East and he also visited Palestine in his travels. He expressed the opinion that the sentiment for prohibition in Palestine is widespread and that it is not unlikely that an organization to further the idea will soon be established there. An organization of the same character was formed in Egypt and also in Turkey.

Polish Jewry and Jewish Relief

By J. L. COHEN, of Toronto

(Reprinted from The Jewish Day)

An article appears in the issue of October 4, of the "New Judaea" (published in London, England) which is deserving of more than passing attention. In it Deputy Greenbaum, whose identification with the integral interests of Polish Jewry is well known, discusses the fundamental facts and conditions of Polish-Jewish ecnomic life.

In analyzing the problems of distress and readjustment that face Polish Jewry, Deputy Greenbaum goes to the root of the economic conditions and history of Polish Jewry. Pre-war Polish Jewry, he points out, earned its livelihood in the main, by means of the following:

"During the last decade preceding the Great War and following the Russo-Japanese war, Jews in Poland had been taking an ever increasing share in commerce with Russia and in industries working for the Russian market. Townlets that were on the verge of ruin flourished again immediately they began to manufacture any kind of goods for which there was a demand in Russia . . . All this is now at an end. There is a high wall between Poland and Russia and nobody knows when it will be removed. Nobody ventures to predict whether its disappearance will re-establish conditions as they were before the war . . ."

"Those Jews who had formerly earned a livelihood by acting as intermediaries between town and country, had gradually lost their positions as a result of the growth of a Polish bourgeoisie and the spread of the co-operative movement (the peasants by the growth of the latter, making themselves independent of Jewish dealers). They then transferred their energies to the performance of similar functions in regard to Poland and Russia or in reference to Germany, Western Europe and Russia, via Poland. In this manner they became economically strong, and increasingly independent of the internal Polish market. As a result, the boycott organized shortly before the war did no serious damage."

The war having destroyed this, the "surplus" character of Polish Jewry so far as the internal economic life of the country was concerned, becomes exposed and the Jews find themselves left "suspended in mid-air." This involves a question not of distress due to want or disorganization, but a problem of complete readjustment.

For a while after the war, the bare truth could be concealed by currency and business fluctuations. "In the year immediately following the war, when Polish currency was depreciated and the speculation fever was at its height, less pressure was felt. From the social point of view this period was disastrous for Jewry, as it delayed the process of return to work, of 'labourization' of the Jewish masses. Artisans became merchants, and the exercise of their crafts no longer furnished them with a livelihood. As yet the economic conditions were not bad; but anyone looking below the surface could already discern the symptoms of approaching crisis." The stabilization of currency and the imposition of heavy taxes put a stop to speculation, and the Jews realized that bad times were approaching and began to look for an avenue of escape.

The Jews then were left high and dry. They constituted a "surplus" portion of the population, unabsorbed, with no roots in economic strata. This situation would be distressing indeed if the Jews enjoyed the co-operation of government authorities and surrounding population. But encountered with the, at best, indifference of the former and clear hostility of the latter, the situation is one that is quite beyond palliative remedies. Yet the Joint carries on its new programme of relief measures, administering its affairs, to quote Deputy Greenbaum again "in the same old way, just as if nothing had occurred in the intervening years since the Joint gave up its work in the country."

The question is necessarily one of redistribution of the Polish Jewry population either by internal re-arrangement or by emigration to external sources. Bread and milk and clothes and shelter, and the accompanying features of a relief programme accomplish nothing beyond the day of feeding. As a programme of rehabilitation they accomplish aid in the sense of pauperizing the community and do evil by merely postponing the day of reckoning. "It can be said without that unless the social and economic phenomena that have become so prominent in the life of the Jewish people during the last few years are taken into consideration, millions of dollars will be wasted without any important research or thorough improvement in the position being achieved."

The so-called fourth "Aliyath," the stream of about 16,000 Polish Jewish immigrants to Palestine in one year was the fruit of foresight on the part of those who had not yet lost their all and who realized the inevitability of economic catastrophe. Unfortunately conditions broke too soon to allow many more to escape.

What then is available to these hundreds of thousands of Jews who have lost their means of livelihood and are unable to find any other occupation? A transfer to agriculture within Poland? Deputy Greenbaum's statement on this alternative is striking in its very obviousness. "A transfer to agriculture is, in Poland," he says, "out of the question, not only owing to anti-Semitism, or unwillingness on the part of Jews, but primarily owing to the fact that no agrarian revolution has taken place in Poland, that land reform has for practical purposes not been carried through, and that the scarcity of land is being ever more acutely felt by the peasantry. There is no unoccupied land in Poland, nor will there be even if large holdings are abolished. The regions where some free land may be said to exist (the Eastern Provinces) are the fighting ground of sharply contrasted nationalities, the position being rendered more acute by the Polish attempts to settle the landless peasants in the region."

As to the alternative, that of assisting the artisan and tradesman within the limits of present conditions by the grant of credits, Mr. Greenbaum goes on to say: "What is the use of credit in a townlet like, say, Brzessin, where Jews lived entirely on what they earned by making clothing for the Russian market? How will credit assist the clothes-workers who sold their goods to shoe factories which worked for Russia? The same applies to cloth-manufacturing, to watch-making, to scores of other trades."

The only conclusion to which Deputy Greenbaum can come is that Polish Jewry must be assisted to emigrate. Emigration will help not only those who leave but will also render life easier to those remaining by removing excess of population.

The analysis is not far removed from the announcement made by non-Jewish Poland, who bemoan likewise a dilemma of excess population measured by economic facilities or who appeal likewise for means of emigration. Their conception of emigration is general. Deputy Greenbaum's conception of emigration is Palestine. If not there, whither?

The analysis assumes broader significance if viewed with the events of the conference of the United Jewish Campaign held during this month. The conference went out of its way to emphasize its continued adherence to the support of Palestinian colonization, to which it pledged itself at the famous Philadelphia Conference of September, 1925. The Zionists, of course, will hail the declaration as a political victory and perhaps in the eagerness to prove how correct and unassailable they have always been will spoil the effect of this move. But though the machinery of social events grind slowly, social facts have a logic of their own and force an approximate conclusion in spite of the criss-cross of rival politicians. The fact remains that the conference heard with approval the recommendation of the executive committee that Dr. Joseph Rosen, in charge of the colonization work in Russia, proceed to Palestine for the purpose of studying the colonization problems there and that he submit his recommendation to the committee.

This may involve tangible results. The impasse in Poland must in some measure force the hands of the Jewish Distribution Committee officers.

Official Zionists of course regard this as left-handed readjusting and cannot understand why the direct approach should not be made of supporting the Zionist movement and its funds and so providing direct means of assisting Polish Jewry to emigrate to Palestine.

That seems perfect logic to the Zionists. To the joint interests the Zionists seem to carry logic too far. They insist on retaining control of the administration and spending their own millions. Some of them would rather be wrong than be Zionists.

In the meantime World-Jewry stands by in the hope that while the policy goes on, enough moneys will trickle by accident or design, into such channels enough to yield a harvest sufficient to screen the barrenness of results of internal conflict.

Vladimir Jabotinsky was refused permission to speak in the amphitheatre of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem on the ground that the rostrum there could not be used for party meetings. A strong protest against the action of the university authorities was lodged by the Revisionists, the followers of Jabotinsky.

HAY FEVER AT EMPIRE

The event of the current week in Toronto is the initial production of the English Repertory Company (which is the first company of the newly formed Theatre Guild of Canada, Limited), at the Empire Theatre on Saturday, November 6. This premiere is attracting the attention of the public and critics alike both because the production will be the first in Toronto of Noel Coward's gay comedy success, "Hay Fever"—and as marking the debut here of a company of outstanding English artists who have already triumphed in London and New York.

Major John Mood, well-known Hart House player, is the personality behind this artistic movement which is to be supported generously by leading citizens in Canada.

"Hay Fever," by the author of "The Vortex" and "The Queen Was in the Parlor," deals with an interesting family of four.

Miss Jane Saville, cast for "The Constant Nymph," in New York, will appear as Judith (by kind permission of Basil Dean), Phyllis Coghlan, Haroldine Humphries, Cicely Hartopp, Daye Dawne, Maurice Colbourne, Geoffrey Millar, Victor Tandy. Major Mood will assume the various other roles.

"Hay Fever" will be produced under the personal direction of Leo Carroll, also loaned for the opening Guild production by kind permission of Basil Dean.

conciliatory political views held by the moderates, with a respectable international circulation.

All streams of Jewish thought converge in Palestine, and the Jewish race is represented in this centre of attraction by some of its most dynamic, and at the same time, idealistic elements. These two qualities combined go toward creating an atmosphere where the written and the spoken word breed most profusely and exotically, very much like Palestine's flora during the rainy season.

The religious susceptibilities of the orthodox Jews, the Moslem, the Catholic, Greek-Orthodox and other communities have furnished pitfalls for the Jewish press on some occasions. One such occasion resulted from a passing remark in a Hebrew humorous feuilleton about the natural explanation of the birth of Christ. The entire priesthood was stirred. A suit followed and debate raged hotly for a time.

Another incident, this time without bearing on religion, illustrates the public's susceptibility. This criticism of a Tel-Aviv editor directed at certain females located unfortunately among a section of Jewish Polish immigrants, brought to his office a self-appointed delegation asking him to retract his statement which, they alleged, reflected on Jewish Polish immigrants as a whole. As he maintained a dignified bearing, an infuriated Jew slapped his face. The bad manners of the offenders were generally reproved, but the aforesaid editor did not reiterate his moralizing.

What characterizes the Jewish press is mainly its puritanic tendency, a peculiar brand of ultra-modernism, unaffected by other aspects of modernism. Isolated as the East European immigrants coming to Palestine and the natives of Palestine themselves are from the busy western world, the practical policy of the Palestinian press strikes one at times as being slightly quaint and old-fashioned. This, however, does not detract from its high-mindedness and avoidance of sensationalism in any form.

The Arabic press is as active as that of the Jews, but on another level. When political conditions in Palestine were much more acute than they are now, their newspapers vied with one another in a frenzy of mud-flinging at anything Jewish. Aided by the other self-appointed Arabic political agitators and champions of the Arab majority of the population, these papers could have formed a first-rate yellow press with great popular power but for the fact that the masses are illiterate. Moreover, the rural population finding it expedient to co-operate with the Jews, took little interest in the agitation. There are a dozen newspapers printed in Arabic—four appearing weekly, the rest twice to four times a week. The number of potential readers does not exceed 80,000. The consequence is that all these newspapers have a very small circulation, ranging between 500 and 1,500, and most have little independence or authority. At the beginning of the Arabic agitation in 1918 the Arabic press promoted the political leaders unanimously. Their endless misinterpretations of Sir Herbert Samuel's and the Jewish population's most conciliatary moves gave them no end of "copy," and they never tired of "chewing the rag," day in, day out. No attempt was made by the High Commissioner to control this expression of "public opinion." Eventually the newspapers exhausted their appeal to the readers.

As the agitation subsided a few opposing parties developed from the previous unity of the Christian-Moslem party, and one newspaper after another passed from support to criticism and engaged in mutual mud-slinging of an amusing nature. Religious hatreds, irrepressible in the East, express themselves again in the Arabic press at the expense of one another. Mention must be made also of the news organization of these publications, evident more particularly during the Moroccan and Syrian revolts, with which every Arab is in sympathy, except the Christian Arabs. There was a time when these newspapers discussed very seriously a military expedition organized by Abd-el-Krim against Marseilles. The most fantastic tales were circulated on the score of the Syrian rebellion, even at times when the rebels were in full retreat. One young Druse single-handed slew fifty-five French soldiers, etc. Most readers were generally too ignorant about geography and kindred subjects to realize the grossness of this instrument of Pan-Islamic propaganda.

Such as it is is, this press is a curious survival of a distant past, as illustrated again in its editorial system. It is no uncommon thing to see an eager gathering in a street cafe listening intently, with many an understanding nod, to a young Arab newspaper scribbler, reading to them an advance copy of to-morrow's editorial. The audience is proud of having been let into the magic circle. On the day following many would resell the paper to their friends after perusing it.—New York World

Rabbi Isserman's Editorial

Jews are found in all three political parties, as their economic interests dictate. Their political stakes do not vary from those of their non-Jewish neighbours. They need no Jewish representatives.

For many centuries the Jew was legally disqualified from holding public office in all European countries. This policy was a heritage bequeathed to European states by mediaeval church councils, and a left-over from the temporal power of the papacy. Because of such disqualification, the Jew is now unduly anxious to have office holders. One might say in the terms of modern psychology, that for so long has the desire to hold public office been inhibited in the Jew, that now he has an office-holding complex. He usually exaggerates the value and importance of office-holders in general.

All the discussion about the selection of Jewish candidates, and the notoriety it has received, have been annoying to many Jews, who consider themselves Canadians and who do not consider the Jews a political party. But what all real Canadians, Christians as well as Jews, will resist very keenly is the constant rejection of able men for public office by political parties merely because of their religious affiliations. It would be unfair to elect a man to public office because he is a Jew. But it is equally unfair to reject a man for public office, because he is a Jew.

Poor "Shatdlonim"

Jews have no reason to love Roumania. It is not normal for any person to love his tormentor. Jews who have had the good fortune to escape from Roumania are happy to forget it as a bad nightmare. Toronto Jews of Roumanian origin owe allegiance to Canada as their homeland. They owe nothing to Roumania and they need not assume knightly manners.

A Jewish rabbi desecrates the holy tongue when he reads adulatory addresses to the representative of a land which humiliates and grinds down his own brothers. The Jewish girls who knelt with their floral offerings before Queen Marie were degrading the Jewish sense of self-respect. The Queen must have looked at them and thought: "What? Some more Jews! I hate them in Roumania. What do they want of me here?"

Perhaps these misguided "members of the Roumanian colony" thought that by their action they would soften the heart of the Queen towards the Jews in Roumania. They thought that the Queen need only see them to begin loving the Jews. This is a charitable view to take of their action.

The Ukrainians spoke and acted like men. Our Jewish self-appointed ambassador acted like cowering invertebrates.

It is a pity that we have no properly instituted Jewish body to prevent such irresponsible action on the part of individuals.

Mrs. Jack Ellias and Miss Rose Ellias carried bouquets of yellow chrysanthemums, which they offered the queen on behalf of the Roumanian Ladies' Auxiliary.

Why curtains look so trim—

IF you are finicky about your curtains—and most women are—you will be glad to test Langley service. First, we measure each curtain. Then it is folded and placed in a protective net bag to be cleaned. After a thorough cleansing and rinsing, curtains are then placed on frames which hold them to the exact original measurement. They are framed in pairs—back to back. Every inch of edge is set precisely. A "sizing" of our own formula (which will not rot as ordinary starch does) is used. The curtain comes off the drying frame absolutely true and square. You will be delighted with the way it hangs. You will be pleased indeed with the finish. You will say: "It certainly is worth while to have such skilled fingers, such modern equipment and such sensible care applied to my curtains—they are perfect."

The knowledge that one is properly dressed creates that confidence which characterizes a successful man.

Collars that feel like a caress. The Van-Dusen and semi-soft made to rival the best starched collar.

Shirts that fit correctly. No bulging at neck or bosom. Cuffs turned evenly, and when necessary taken off and reversed.

Socks and Woollens with that soft, velvety feeling so much desired and only possible when a soap like "Ivory" is used.

Repairs—Every article the man wears kept in first-class condition, not merely "mending free."

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, mineral, water power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.
